Competences and the Facilitation of Inclusion
A Philosophical Backdrop
'The End of Education: redefining the value of education' –Neil Postman 1996 education does not simply serve a public. It creates a public.

What kind of public does it create?

The answer has nothing to do with testing, teacher accountability or other aspects of managing schools. It has to do with a shared narrative and the capacity of such to provide an inspired reason for schooling.
All Children Need

• Ears that hear the whispers of life
• Eyes that see both things & possibilities
• Mind that understands uncertainty
• Heart that knows the joy of success & the fun of failure

• An abiding sense of curiosity and wonder
‘Teachers cannot limit their work to the classroom only, leaving the larger setting and purposes of schooling to be determined by others. They must take active responsibility for the goals to which they are committed, and for the social setting in which these goals may prosper.’
“It is... impossible to talk extensively about teachers and teaching without a language of morality.”

“Holding ideals is not exhibiting warm and fuzzy feelings but needs to be valued as part of intensive educational debate about fundamental purposes ...the absence of which undermines the heart of professionalism...”

• greater complexity in teaching e.g. in handling mixed-ability classes, reluctant learners, classes marked by significant diversity, or inter-disciplinary work;

• the deployment of a wider range of teaching strategies;

• the ability to adduce evidence of one’s effectiveness;

• basing teaching on a wider range of evidence, reading and research;
The real voyage of discovery consists both in seeing new landscapes but also in seeing with new eyes.

“And the end of all our exploring, will be to arrive where we started, and know the place for the first time.”

T. S. Eliot

For inclusion has and always will be part of our mission as teachers!
Moral Visionary Profession

“...making teaching into a moral, visionary profession once more where teachers know and care about their world as well as and as part of their work.

It means teachers recapturing their status and dignity as some of society’s leading intellectuals, and not being the mere technicians, instruments and deliverers of other people’s agendas.........

Those who focus only on teaching techniques and curriculum standards and who do not also engage teachers in the greater social and moral questions of their time, promote a diminished view of teaching and teacher professionalism that has no place in a sophisticated knowledge society.”

School: Socialisation to Conformity

demands:

“adherence to the dictates of social convention and it privileges routinized behaviour over critical action. Its centripetal force pulls towards reproducing the status quo in behaviour as it mediates our subjective capacity to intervene in the world. Education when dominated by the discourse and discursive practices of conformity, scripts a mechanistic training”
